Careers for History Majors

There are a great many career fields which build on studies in History. In exploring options, reflect on the skills you have developed through your major, the ones you prefer using and the careers which are most strongly related.

What skills and knowledge do I develop by studying History?

- researching by using variety of sources and tools, and evaluating sources and the reliability of information and ideas
- analysing information and ideas to come up with insights which clarify and enlarge understanding - includes being able to abstract knowledge out of a mass of information, distinguish relevant from irrelevant information, identify unstated assumptions, form judgements from conflicting evidence, and contextualise.
- constructing an argument by selecting and ordering relevant evidence
- producing written documents which communicate in a structured, clear, accurate and persuasive manner

While many of the careers below make use of all of these, some make strong use of a particular skill, e.g. Law – constructing an argument; Information Management – using sources; Journalism – producing written communication. In thinking about career choice, consider which of these skills you prefer using.

For some careers, your History knowledge base and subject area interests are important also.

What careers build on these skills and knowledge?

The table below lists a range of careers which make use of studies in History. The list is not definitive – depending on your own interests and experiences, there may well be other ways to build on your major.

Next Steps

The table also provides some information about ‘next steps’ ie what you might need to do to start a career in the particular field, specifically whether graduate study is required or whether immediate employment is possible.

There are two employment types for Bachelor graduates:

- General employment positions suitable for new graduates
- Graduate Employment Programs

Graduate Employment Programs are offered by some employers – generally large commercial organisations and government. Graduate Employment Program positions are jobs that include a substantial component of training and development. Recruitment for these programs takes place early in the year (around March-May). Final year tertiary students and recent grads can apply. For some of the career areas discussed, Graduate Employment programs are available.

What other careers can I consider?
History majors may also pursue careers which are not directly related but make use of transferable skills and/or pick up on other interests.

- Careers via graduate study – many careers are available via graduate study which is accessible to Bachelor of Arts graduates; these include both Arts-related careers such as Journalism, Information Management/Librarianship, International Development; and careers in more diverse fields such as Urban Planning, Nursing, Information Systems, Accounting.

- Careers via Graduate Employment Programs - in addition to government, some other large organisations have programs open to all disciplines where graduates are generally recruited for general management careers. Some management consultancies also consider applicants from all disciplines. Opportunities are advertised (generally early each year) on Careers Online, and graduate recruitment sites eg Graduate Opportunities, GradConnection.
